OPERATIONS

Moved to England in Dec 1943. Began combat operations with Ninth AF in Feb 1944. Engaged in escort activities and flew dive-bombing missions to attack such targets as bridges, airdromes, rail facilities, gun positions, and V-weapon sites prior to the invasion of the Continent. Attacked rail targets and gun emplacements in France during the invasion on 6 Jun.

Moved to the Continent late in Jun and continued to dive-bomb targets during the succeeding weeks of the battle for Normandy. Bombed targets near St Lo in Jul to assist Allied forces in breaking through German lines at that point, and supported the subsequent drive across northern France during Aug-Sep. In Sep, also flew patrols in cooperation with airborne operations in Holland.

Cited by the Belgian government for assisting Allied armies in the period from the invasion of Normandy through the initial phases of the liberation of Belgium. During the fall of 1944, operated in connection with the seizure of Aachen and aided ground troops in the offensive toward the Rhine, receiving a DUC for destroying and damaging numerous enemy fighters over the Bonn-Dusseldorf area in Germany on 21 Oct. Received second Belgian award for actions during the Battle of the Bulge when the group struck such targets as vehicles, rolling stock, marshalling yards, gun positions, factories, and towns.

Provided cover during airborne operations across the Rhine in Mar 1945 and supported the drive into Germany. Awarded second DUC for operations on 20 Apr 1945 when the group attacked airfields, motor transports, and ammunition dumps to aid the Allied advance through southern Germany. Ended combat in May and took part in the disarmament program until Jun 1945. Moved to the US in Sep 1945.

On 23 Aug 1946, the 132d Fighter Group, commanded by Col Ellis E. Eno, received its federal recognition and became part of the 71st Fighter Wing, located in St. Louis, MO. Other units receiving federal recognition at this time were the 124th Fighter Squadron, LTC William J. Feiler, Commander; the Utility Flight. 124th Fighter Squadron. Capt Roger W. Gilbert, Commander; and the 124th Weather Station, Capt Charles T. Hight, Commander. Det. A. 232d Air Service Group, commanded by Capt. Gerald Corrigan. (original member), received its federal recognition on 6 Sep 1946. The authorized manning was 75 officers and 212 enlisted. With the addition of the Headquarters Det. 232d Air Service Group on 12 Oct 1948, the authorized strength increased to 100 officers and 361 enlisted. Maj Homer E. Bradshaw was the Commander of this unit. At the time of federal recognition, the unit was only 40 percent manned. Cpt Gilbert and SSgt Don Boo, also an original member, launched a very aggressive recruiting program for both WW II veterans and non-veterans alike.

Ordered into active service, 1 Apr 1951 Relieved from active service and returned, less personnel and equipment, to ANG (Iowa), 1 Jan 1953
