EMBLEM

A disc, above a scarlet scroll, blazoned as follows: Azure, on a pale argent a pile issuing from base throughout gules, overall issuing from a bezant indented of 17 and charged with a leaf of the Ohio Buckeye of the third six arrows four in saltire and two in fess silver barbed gold all within a diminished bordure per bor-due of the third (gules) and second. SIGNIFICANCE: The design depicts both the mission and the State affiliation of the Squadron. The white strip with the scarlet pile, representing a runway and the contrail of an aircraft, stands for the Air Force facilities operated and maintained by the Squadron in support of tactical units. The gold central device, charged with the red leaf representing the spiked husk and leaf of the Buckeye, the Ohio State tree, identifies the unit with the Ohio Air National Guard. The spikes are 17 in number in reference to Ohio being the seventeenth state to be admitted to the Union. The arrows, standing for air combat, refer to the Squadron's mission of combat support. The global scope of the mission is indicated both by the blue disc, simulating a globe, and by the multiple directions in which the arrows point. Ultramarine blue and gold are for the Air Force. (Approved, 6 Nov 1967)
